A Note on Copyright

For its policy on reproducing the citations enclosed in foot-noting square-brackets, Plumbago Books works within the framework of the Copyright, Design and Patents Act (1988). This allows authors to use 'short phrases' and 'incidental inclusion' freely, especially within works supported by an 'approved body'. In this case, the 'Poetics of Music' series, of which this volume is part, was 'pump-primed' in 2004 by the Principal of King's College London and continues to enjoy the support of the College as part of its academic research strategy. Plumbago Books is itself a small, not-for-profit academic press. We particularly abide by the restriction of Faber and Faber Ltd of 'up to 10 lines' of a citation, a restriction we have applied to all sources. Plumbago has also respected the wishes of individual institutions, like The Guardian, to have use of their materials formally registered. We are grateful for the encouragement of individuals cited in the text to use their work freely, as we are to the Britten-Pears Library (The Red House, Aldeburgh) for formerly approving quotations from Benjamin Britten and Alexander Goehr. If we are judged not to have been fair in our practice, we are more than happy to discuss the matter with the party concerned. We have tried to contact the publishers whose sources we cite. Where they have not replied, we have taken their silence for assent.
